130 (Inv #: 83058) Lyle Alzado Late 1970s Denver Broncos Game Used Helmet

Popular, colorful and controversial NFL star Lyle Alzado (1949-1992) used this helmet during his tenure as a Denver Broncos defensive lineman in the late 1970s. The 1970s Broncos' logo is featured on decals adhered to both sides of the blue helmet, and the club's white-orange-and-white stripe pattern runs down the center. Alzado's number "77" flanks the stripe design at the base of the back of the helmet in white stickers, and the snubber carries the "Riddell" insignia. The well-worn, four-bar, green dot full cage lineman face mask (cream period clips) and a double-low hook up, snap-on chinstrap are still present. At the interior, snap-on leather jaw pads (the left autographed by Alzado) and padding are intact, and the player's number "77" is marked above one of the earholes. Solid wear is evident, both inside and out, with paint transfer and scuffing throughout.
